

XM Instant traffic and weather is very good when traveling. i.e driving from Chicago to Pittsburg. I know before hand the weather and traffic in my destiation. This is not a local service but a nationwide service that is continually broadcast. This is part of an excellent subscription service that I am paying for each month. It is not provide or controlled by the over the air local stations that provid a vast wasteland of no quality content. Before XM I never listened to AM/FM when traveling but rather listened to CD's. It should not be up to the NAB to control what I am willing to pay for on a subscription service. If they are afraid of XM they should improve their content and compete with it, and not try to cripple XM radio. Isn't The NAB the same lobby that tried to kill FM radio and TV when they were first introduced?
